History & Basic Information

Situated in North Bengal, Jalpaiguri was once a part of the kingdom of Kamarupa in ancient time, only to become a part of Kamata kingdom in medieval period. According to Sailen Debnath, three of the five ancient capitals of Kamatapur were in Jalpaiguri district geographically.

Jalpaiguri comprises western Dooars and the major part of the eastern Morang. Till 1865, the Dooars of Jalpaiguri were under the control of Bhutan kingdom. After the Treaty of Sinchula by the British, it was added to the district of Jalpaiguri in 1869 and finally to the Indian Union in 1949.

Jalpaiguri initially had three sub-divisions – Jalpaiguri Sadar subdivision, Malbazar subdivision and Alipurduar subdivision from which Alipurduar got separated as a district in the year 2014. Two other subdivisions – Jalpaiguri Sadar and Malbazar - remained with Jalpaiguri district.

Economy and Production Details

This non-industry district's economy mainly depends on tea industry whose staple resources are tealeaves. Jalpaiguri is the second largest tea-producer in the state. A large-scale employment is contributed by tea processing, tea packaging etc.

Apart from that, rice cultivation is another source of livelihood in Jalpaiguri. Rice being the principal crop of the district, is mainly produced to serve the domestic requirement. Wheat is another crop that is cultivated in many areas of the district. The cultivation of horticulture also serves the district's economy to a large extent. Major exportable products of Jalpaiguri include Jute, Tobacco, Mustard and orchard fruits like pineapple, banana etc.
